Dear Kent Fastrack,

I am writing to formally demand a full refund of every penny I have paid.

As an autistic passenger, I rely on a disability concession pass to travel without incident. However, due to the absence of a valid Kent disability concession pass, I have been subjected to repeated and escalating disrespect from your drivers. This is not a minor inconvenience — for an autistic person, hostile or dismissive interactions in public transport environments cause genuine distress and can make travel feel entirely unsafe.

What makes this situation wholly unacceptable is that your drivers have openly admitted they care only about money, not about the welfare or dignity of their passengers. This is not my interpretation or assumption — this is what I have been told directly. A transport service that operates with such blatant disregard for its passengers, particularly disabled ones, has failed in its most basic duty of care.

I have paid for a service I cannot safely or comfortably use, and your company's conduct has made that abundantly clear. I therefore demand a full refund of all monies paid, without delay.

My account details are as follows:

Please confirm receipt of this complaint and provide a timeline for my refund at your earliest convenience. If this matter is not resolved promptly, I will not hesitate to escalate to the relevant transport authority and disability rights bodies.
